Make-up Test: Rules and Conditions

- Any student in good standing who got a grade below 60% in one of the tests and who attended the class when the original test was returned may write a make-up test (see Privileges: Extensions, Waivers, and Other Authorizations from the Course Outline).
- Under no circumstances can a student write two make-up tests.
- If, according to the evaluation criteria, a student writes a very good make-up test, that student can get up to 10% over his/her lowest midterm grade. It is expected that the work be of very high quality to earn the extra 10%.
- Under extraordinary circumstances, I may raise the mark by more than 10%, particularly to reward those students who made extraordinarily positive contributions in virtually every single class and, for some reason, did not do very well on a test.
- Under extraordinary circumstances, I may allow a student who got a grade above 60% to write a make-up test, particularly to reward those students who made extraordinarily positive contributions in virtually every single class and, for some reason, did not do very well on a test.
- A poor performance on the make-up test will not lower the original grade.
- Please respect the instructions regarding the make-up test. There are no exceptions. This is not an exam or for regular-credit assignment. This make-up test is considered a privilege and not a right. For further clarification, if a student cannot come to class for the make-up test, the student loses the privilege to write the make-up test. Under no circumstance whatsoever will the make-up test be rescheduled.

- These rules and conditions elaborate upon the section entitled Privileges: Extensions, Waivers, and Other Authorizations from the Course Outline. Please read that section from the course outline. Because of the nature of the make-up test, these rules may change from time to time. If so, any changes will be posted on the course website. Changes to these rules and conditions include the possibility of cancelling the make-up test.
